FREDERICK CAMPUS

FREDERICK CAMPUS PROFESSORS

This Fall, professors at Mount St. Mary's Frederick Campus have the option of teaching in multiple modalities, including traditional face-to-face (F2F), a blended classroom model (some students present and others online), and from a distance.

For all three options enhanced Zoom™ hardware and software is available in all classrooms. Further, technical support will be available each evening until 7 p.m.

F2F Instruction

Professors will be required to abide by all Mount COVID-19 policies to include:

- » Complete the daily personal health attestation.
- » Always use their Mount ID to enter the building
- » Properly wearing a mask whenever they are physically in the Frederick Campus building, unless they are the only person in a room.
- » Adhering to social distancing guidelines.
- » Follow all posted guidelines on campus.

Blended Instruction

Depending on the number of students registered in a course, and/or the number of students who elect to attend virtually, professors may deliver a combination of F2F and distance instruction in the same room. In this case professors would be required to both adhere to the F2F guidelines and address the needs of the distance learning students. Large classes with students who elect to attend F2F may be split into two adjacent rooms, with the professor and some students in one classroom and the remainder of students in another.

Distance Learning Instruction

Professors who elect to teach their course online may do so from a Frederick Campus classroom or their home. Students may elect to take their courses from home or a Frederick Campus classroom.

FREDERICK CAMPUS STUDENTS

Similarly, this Fall the Mount's students have the options regarding the environment in which they learn.

If their professor is delivering instruction F2F, students are invited to join them in the classroom. However, if students have health and safety concerns about attending in person, students may attend class remotely.

When on the Frederick Campus, whether to meet with their advisor, study independently, collaborate with other students, or attend class, all students must adhere to Mount COVID-19 policies:

- » Complete the daily personal health attestation
- » Always use their Mount ID to enter the building
- » Properly wearing a mask whenever they are physically in the Frederick Campus building, unless they are the only person in a room
- » Adhere to social distancing guidelines
- » Follow all posted guidelines on campus

If their professor is delivering instruction at a distance, then students have two options: First, students are welcome to come to campus and utilize our rooms and Zoom™ technology during normal campus hours of operation. In addition, students can attend their courses from home, their place of work, or wherever else they are comfortable learning.

As students consider their options, they are encouraged to speak with their academic advisor or program director. Also, social distancing policies will dictate the number of students on campus. Should students need to change the modality in which they take classes, students MUST notify the Frederick Campus' Office of the Associate Provost.

More information will be provided as the semester begins.
